FACILITATOR: Ian McBurney

Ian McBurney describes himself as an ecological sustainability mentor for government, business and communities. He has a degree in environmental engineering and has spent ten years at the cutting edge of environmental education, working with over 150 Sustainability Street Villages, delivering sustainability culture change training in workplaces to over 6000 people, performing to 10,000 students in the famous Vox bandicoot environmental theatre program and lately mentoring businesses on the journey to sustainability. He is a lively, passionate and thought provoking. His message is of the urgency of our ecological challenges, yet also of hope, imagination and opportunities: the winds of change are blowing from many fronts – and every decision we make, every day is changing the course of history. You can find out more about Ian at www.liveecological.com.au

"Ian is one of the most knowledgeable & capable leaders, facilitators & educators of community, school & business education for sustainability that I have known."

- Dr Colin Hocking | Senior Research Fellow | Institute for Sustainability & Innovation | Victoria University

TRAINING CONTENT

- We will teach each other how we learn and why we change
- We will develop our influencing and communication skills
- We will find out why conversations are more important than solar panels and why every decision we make matters.
- We will think deeply about our place on earth and our future
- We will create, learn and practice as a group, alone and in pairs
- The style will be participatory, fun and human scale!
